

My dinner is finished. With my long slender friend,
I sit in the door and look at the sunset.
The angle, upwards, goes to a beautiful sunset.
And the music descends in glittering train.
Each puff that I smoke sends deep in my heart,
A feeling to quiet the tumult of mine,
Adrift for a while all the day of the day,
To see in my breast the seed of despair.
My pipe, as it is, is the emblem of mine,
The weed it contains its original dust,
The fire it kindles burns it away,
The ash, his ashes, wherever they rest.
Not just to the smoke, but to the smoke from the stem,
Through, mingling with air it rises from the stem,
The felt all around, and it, flavored the west,
Will gladden the smoke by day or by night.
The pipe that the influence of man, every man,
Exhausts from his heart, for good or for ill,
It taught it the ways of the day of the day,
Through, happiness, now, it labors on still,
And now that this essence may be made all,
A flavor descends from the stem of God,
The pipe contains it, and it is the pipe,
Will labor for good while it comes to the end,
Beneath the sun.

A Terrible Bedfellow.

I looked at my neighbor with considerable curiosity. His face indicated a man of not over thirty years, a period at which men are still young; but his hair was as white as fresh-fallen snow. One seldom sees, even on the heads of the oldest men, hair of such immaculate whiteness. He sat by my side in a car of the Great Western railroad, in Canada, and was looking out of the window. Suddenly turning his head he caught me in the act of staring at him—a rudeness of which I was ashamed. I was about to say words of apology, when he quietly remarked:—
“Don't mention it, sir; I used to it.”
“You mean,” I said, “that you have been in the habit of staring at people?”
“No,” he replied, “I have not. I have been in the habit of staring at myself.”
“Why?” I asked.
“Because,” he replied, “I have been in the habit of staring at myself.”

“I was a soldier in the army of India,” said he, “and often the one with soldiers, I was a little too fond of liquor. One day I got drunk and was shut up in the black-hole for it. I slumped down upon the floor of the dungeon, and I was just dropping off to sleep, when I felt a cold, slimy shape crawling across my right hand as it lay stretched out before my head on the floor. I knew at once what it was—a snake! Of course my first impulse was to draw away my hand; but knowing that if I did so the poisonous reptile would probably strike its fangs into me, I lay still, with my heart beating in my breast like a sledge hammer. Of course my fright sobered me instantly. I realized all my peril in its fullest extent. Oh, how I lamented, the hour that I touched liquor! In every glass of liquor there is a serpent; but it does not come in the shape of a serpent, but in the shape of a man. I saw the reptile dragged its carcass across my face, inch by inch, and crept down over my breast and thrust its head inside my jacket. As I felt the hideous scarping of the slimy body over my cheeks it was only by the most tremendous effort that I succeeded in restraining myself from yelling loudly with mingled terror and disgust.”

“At last I felt the full writhing down towards my chin; but imagine what I felt at heart, if you can imagine it, as I realized that the dreadful creature had crept up under my jacket as I lay, and had seemingly gone to sleep, for it was as still as death. Evidently it had no idea that I was a human creature; if it had it would never have acted in this manner. All snakes are cowardly, and they will not approach a man unless to strike him in self defense. Three hours I lay with dreadful weight in my bosom, and each minute was like an hour to me—like a year. I seemed to have lived a lifetime in that brief space. Every incident of my life passed before my memory in rapid succession, as they say is the case with a drowning man. I thought of my mother, away in old England, my happy home by the Avon; my Mary, the girl I loved, and never expected to see them more.”

“For no matter how long I bore this, I felt that it would be death at last. I lay as rigid as a corpse, scarcely daring even to breathe, and all the time my breast was growing colder and colder where the snake was lying against it, with nothing but a thin cotton shirt between my skin and it. I knew if I stirred it would strike; but I felt that I could not bear this much longer. Even if I succeeded in lying still until the guard came, I expected his opening the door and coming in would be my death warrant all the same, for no doubt the reptile would see that I was a man as soon as the light should be let in at the door. At last I heard footsteps approaching. There was a rattling at the lock. It was the guard. He opened the door. The snake—a cobra! I saw it now—darting out of its huge hooded head with the hideous rings around its eyes, as if about to strike. I shut my eyes and murmured a prayer. Then it glided away with a swift motion, and disappeared in the darkness. I staggered to my feet and fell swooning into the arms of the guard. For weeks after I was very sick, and when able to be about I found my hair was white as you now see it. I have not touched a drop of liquor since.”

Put These in Your Hat.—To believe a business impossible is the way to make it so. The current coin of life is plain common sense. He who depends upon another dines ill and sleeps worse. A pilot is not chosen for his riches, but his knowledge. If a man deceives you once, shame on him; if he deceives you twice, shame on you. If you take the devil into your boat you must carry him over the sound. The dog wags his tail, not for you, but the bread. If you pay beforehand, your work will be poorly done. He is your friend who speaks well of you behind your back. The fish is soon caught that nibbles at the bait.

An Irish Valentine.—“Och, Paddy, swate Paddy if I was your daddy, I'd kill ye with kisses intirely. If I was your brother, and likewise your mother, I'd see that you went to bed early. To taste of your breath, I'd starve me to death, and leave off my hoops all together. To just have a taste of your arm on my waist, I'd laugh at the meanest of weather. Dear Paddy, be mine, my swate Valentines, ye'll find me both gentle and civil; our lives we will spend to an illigant ind, and care may go dance wid de devil.”

“Will you give me that ring?” said a village dandy to a lady. “for it resembles my love for you; it has no end.”
“Excuse me, sir,” was the reply, “I choose to keep it as being emblematical of mine for you; it has no beginning.”

Can a woman be wetter than when she has a catarrh in her eye? I suppose so, for she has a creek in her back, forty springs in her hooped skirt, and highbited shoes on? Yes, when she has a notion (an ocean) in her head.
